The effects of diazepam and the benzodiazepine antagonist Ro 15-1788 on the self-administration of morphine and cocaine in rats trained to push a lever for the drugs under a fixed-ratio reinforcement schedule have been examined. Diazepam decreased morphine self-administration, but did not alter the self-administration of cocaine at any dose tested. Ro 15-1788 had no effect on morphine self-administration, but antagonized diazepam's effect on morphine self-administration. Diazepam also decreased cocaine self-administration when rats were trained under a PR schedule. The results show that diazepam and Ro 15-1788 selectively decrease the reinforcing properties of morphine under the conditions of this experiment, but do not affect the reinforcing properties of cocaine under the same conditions. The implications of these results to diazepam's treatment of craving for drugs of abuse are discussed.Structure of tissue-specific microRNA-24 and microRNA-449 binding to their respective targets and functional implications. Tissue-specific microRNAs (miRNAs) have been shown to play crucial roles in cell type-specific regulation, yet their mechanisms of action remain unclear. The levels of miRNAs and their targets have been shown to be highly correlated in vivo; however, the functions of miRNAs beyond the regulation of their targets are less well defined. Here, we show that two tissue-specific miRNAs, microRNA-24 (miR-24) and microRNA-449 (miR-449), regulate the activity of their target genes in vitro. Both miRNAs repressed the translation of their targets by interacting with their 3' untranslated regions, which resulted in either transcript degradation or no effect. In addition, we found that the binding sites of both miRNAs have a preference for target sites that are located in close proximity to each other. Because the proximity of miRNA binding sites on a target mRNA is necessary for miRNA to suppress the translation of its target, we hypothesize that miR-24 and miR-449 target the same genes in a specific manner in vivo to control their target expression and functions. = w.updates(state.advanced[path]) state.advanced[path] = state.advanced[path] + l else:
