More Information why do some android apps have wrong permissions and how to make them correct has someone encountered a situation when an android app had wrongly granted permission and misused private data of user? how to fix that? so, it seems the following android apps which had granted permission had been misused and some apps had even released an update with an error, Citigrove app (wrongly granted permission for database access) this is a free app but the usage of user private data DashGear (wrongly granted permission for access to android device) This Android App causes us a privacy issue (it could track user location) Oppo (wrongly granted permission for access to android device) Data stealing app Defend FC (wrongly granted permission for access to android device) Leaps (wrongly granted permission for access to android device) Note: If these apps are free, without any fee to purchase this app, please remove this app, it's surely causing privacy issues to many user as you see above. A: To put it in a nutshell: There's no reason to use a different app to check a permissions dialog if your app already has permission to ask the user a question. Edit: To add to this, the "I have no idea what you are trying to do" dialog is a dialog that most apps should be allowed to do. You don't need root or anything else to install apps, just through the Market. You've already got that bit covered. As for the personal data, it's not just Android that has this problem. Windows, Mac and iOS (in a very open and friendly way) all do too. And the problem is not in using the data at all, the problem is in assuming that if you can use it, anyone else can, too. In other words, that's not what sharing data with your app means. I can share the weather information with others, but if they try to use it, I have no guarantee that they actually know anything about it. It's up to them, not me.

Skipper is a DbDefinitionEditor and visual ORM tool which can define a variety of objects (entities, fields, assocations and regions), is capable of exporting them to a wide range of storage methods, with single click, and import them from DBMS schemas. The project is built upon GWT and uses both HTML and SVG to produce a highly interactive visual IDE. However, it is also possible to run in the Node.js or Python environment. Skipper is a project made by Jose Ramirez Blau. License: The source code of the project is provided by the original authors under the license GPLv3. Note The application is still under development and may contain typos, bugs, unresolved issues and some missing features. Nevertheless, the GUI part is more or less ready to use. If you like it, please consider making a donation via PayPal. Support The application is under heavy development and the developers should improve the way the definitions are read and edited when working with many entities, regions and fields. In addition, the application is also lacking in the number of ORM frameworks supported. In the future, the developers will also look for ways to improve the functionality of this application, such as ability to import models from an external source. For this reason, as well as to improve the quality of the application, users are welcome to send updates via Google Groups or direct message. What's New In Skipper?

Skipper is a powerful application that allows you to define applications using open-source and commercial ORM frameworks, in order to ensure you have a defined project right from the beginning. Thus, using Skipper, you can set the user roles, data types, fields and their relationships, save the project to text files and save the entire project to persistent files, as well as export the project to image files. The application is free for personal use and support is available for commercial projects. With Skipper's powerful graphical capabilities, you can not only create and edit your projects, but also perform updates to any of the defined entities. You can also create associations, inheritances and even import and export the defined entities to other ORM frameworks. Detailed Description: Skipper is an open-source application that aims to be a versatile help tool for your database projects. While the application can be used to define projects with the Object Role Modeling framework, the application also provides the needed facilities to create and edit any of the objects defined in the ORM. These objects can be relationships, fields and their associations, as well as entities. These can either be a simple database table, or a third-party or commercial ORM framework. The tool can also create a plethora of different entities and their associations, depending on the needs of your projects. The application also allows you to save the defined entities to various file formats, in order to ensure you have a defined project right from the beginning. Key Features: Visual representation of defined entities Associations, inheritances, roles Data types and their relations Support for multiple ORM frameworks Import and export Export to image and text files Export to databases, files or database farms Support for a wide range of external databases Supports various database engines Supports PHP 5 and 5.3 Supports many PHP frameworks A: EntityFramework has an out of the box solution for this called EntityObject. It's a special type that uses a proprietary binary format for storing metadata. It's very simple to create objects of this type and has great mapping abilities.
