secreted phosphoproteome and changes in protease/phosphatase activities during human pulmonary lavage. Pulmonary lavage is a clinically relevant, standardized technique for diagnosis of interstitial lung diseases, which frequently present with a non-specific inflammatory response. Proteomic analyses of peripheral blood from patients with pulmonary infiltrates or cardiac arrest have yielded information on proteins involved in the resolution of the inflammation. Although lavage is an invasive procedure, little is known about the protein content of the exudate and its composition on a protein level. Here, we aimed to identify the protein components of the murine lung and analyze their secretion during human pulmonary lavage. A comprehensive analysis of the mouse lung proteome resulted in the identification of 15,028 proteins and 3,719 phosphorylation sites, which revealed the molecular composition of the mouse lung. In a second approach, we systematically compared the secreted proteome of the lungs from the strains C57Bl6 and DBA/2 during human pulmonary lavage. The comparison revealed two prominent differences: The expression and secretion of proteins encoded by solute carrier family 2, member 9 or 9 gene were both more abundant in C57Bl6 than in DBA/2. Furthermore, the activities of serine (0.54-fold), cysteine (0.28-fold) and threonine (0.42-fold) specific phosphatases, of cysteine as well as serine proteases (0.49- to 0.74-fold) were significantly elevated in DBA/2 mice. Based on these results, we propose that human phosphatase activities and the sulfation state of the lung are different between strains and that

Rep. Andy Levin, Mich. — a member of the Ways and Means Committee, which has jurisdiction over health care and tax policy — said Democrats want to make certain Republicans do not undo the protections that people have gained under the ACA. “We’re not going to be satisfied — we're going to be very, very vigilant in making sure," Levin said on the House floor Tuesday. "We're not going to be satisfied with a Republican plan that has a double-digit premium increase and loss of access to care. We're not going to be satisfied with an administration that will take actions that sabotage efforts to have coverage for millions of people. "So we're going to work tirelessly to protect the Affordable Care Act," he said. Democrats say Republicans do not have the votes to eliminate the ACA, and they will try to stall any legislation. "This is not an easy bill to write," Ways and Means Committee Chairman Kevin Brady, Texas, said, touting the legislation for its savings, leaving unchanged the protections for people with pre-existing conditions and limiting Medicaid payments. "I know the bill we are writing will get our chamber's critical 60 votes and will fulfill our solemn obligation," Brady said. "Let's keep working."

Republicans, with 52 seats, cannot repeal the health care law without the support of Democrats. "We are pretty clear that we have the votes," said House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy, Calif. "We're pretty clear we have the support we need."Q: Relationship between MBR and BIOS The easiest way to think about the boot process is: BIOS -> MBR -> Full OS boot I'm trying to wrap
