While all of this is occurring, the total number of HIV cases is still increasing. HIV is an invisible, non-communicable, progressive, chronic and fatal disease. It is the leading cause of morbidity and mortality among people living with AIDS, and the leading contributor to infant mortality. It is also an important public health problem, killing approximately 1,000 South Africans every day, making it the leading cause of death among adolescents and young adults. The 2013 Human Fertility Report shows that the number of reported HIV infections in South Africa in 2013 will be 14,189, up from 13,344 in 2012, a rate of 3.7%. With this high rate of increase, the number of people who are HIV positive continues to increase. The Human Fertility Report 2013 shows that 65% of South Africa's population are using contraception, and of the 8.9 million children born every year, 2.3 million are born to unplanned pregnancies. More than half a million South African children will be born with HIV before the end of 2013, and it is a high probability that more than 250,000 of these children will die. The HIV epidemic poses a major challenge for South Africa's reproductive health programs, which are guided by the 1994 Family Planning Act, and do not include HIV as a target. The South African Government has committed to achieving an AIDS free generation by 2015. HIV is the leading cause of death among South African children and the leading contributor to infant mortality. The mortality rate for HIV infection in the under-fives is already high, and is increasing due to an increased number of young adults becoming infected. In 2013, an estimated 8,500 children (5-9 years) will die from HIV-related illnesses, a 74%
