A fully automated system was developed to automatically sequence peptide mixtures. The system consists of an electrospray ionization mass spectrometer, a computer and a vacuum pump. The system is controlled by a PC-based software, using a user-friendly Graphical User Interface (GUI). The fully automated computer-controlled system was tested using a 'virtual peptide' mixture. In addition, the system was successfully applied to the analysis of a peptide mixture from a complex human serum sample. The automated system significantly increases the throughput of N-terminal sequencing of peptides and is well suited for high-throughput sequencing of peptide mixtures.The latest round of S&P Global market intelligence reveals an upswing in the value of imported electronics and electrical components (E&ECs) into China. Despite overall E&ECs value slipping slightly year on year, under the new rules the value of Chinese imports increased by nearly 3 percent. New rules effective Jan 1, 2016, imposed a tariff of 4.2 percent on about 1,000 E&ECs, from China to the EU. That's a big change from the previous 20 percent tariff. But the number of Chinese-manufactured E&ECs falling into the EU is still up nearly 2 percent year on year. This of course is good news for China's exporters, and for its trade with other countries. Yet it's a very narrow statistical and economic story. As for the news on manufactured goods, it fits a pretty familiar pattern of China offering strong incentives to
