Homepage: Download: In this video we will see how to set the time-out limit for a batch file. Video tutorial include : 1. Install vbscript 2. Install WMI 3. Enable the time-out limit 4. Configuration of the time-out limit 5. Setting the time-out limit 6. Close Time - Out for any batch file is the maximum time limit for the batch file to complete. This limit can be set on the computer the batch file is being run on. The time - out of a batch file may be set to any value which is a positive integer. The default value is zero which means the batch file is run without any time - out limit. To set the time - out limit of a batch file, you will need to use the timeout / t command. For example, if you want to set the time - out limit to 10 minutes, then you can use the following syntax. @echo off timeout /t 10 REM run the batch file without any time - out Many of us need to quickly close an application in Windows Vista. The "Close Windows Vista Application" task is often used for this. If we want to quickly close more than one application, it can be a real pain in the butt, right? What about having to select the application to be closed from a dropdown menu, which requires to find the "Close" button and then to click on it? What if you have to do this thousands of times? Today, I'm going to show you a simple tool that allows you to quickly close an application in Vista without navigating to the menu by double clicking on the icon. DIYCLI is an application that allows you to quickly close a specific application in Windows Vista without having to use the menu. You can close programs, folders, disks, hardware, etc. Description: DIYCLI is an application that allows you to quickly close a specific application
