Handling image files in Adobe Lightroom 3 and Photoshop CC is smarter than ever with the introduction of Cloud Documents. Open the file in Photoshop CC, click Browse in the Library panel, and select Browse in Photoshop Cloud, choose the file, and Lightroom will show you the image. Now when you log into Photoshop CC, your Photos panel will show the new file, and it will only consume storage space on your computer if you add it to your Lightroom catalog. If you choose to open it in Photoshop Lightroom, it will also show up in there. The key to the new version's UI is Adobe's Smart Objects (see next section). Lightroom 3 and Adobe Photoshop have similar Smart Objects, but Photoshop is the only one where Smart Objects can be easily used for all sorts of creative tasks. Lightroom 3's is Smart Tags, which simply tag old Photoshop image files with sound markers. Lightroom is undoubtedly one of the best desktop and professional image processing applications on the market today. Very impressive performance, and very high standards regarding image quality. The Photoshop integration is not quite as strong as the early versions, nor does it quite seem to offer the full functionality of the Photoshop product. In this review, I will show how Lightroom could improve after its 5.0 release, and how some of the missing features may be made available in future upgrades. I will also reviewed some of the bugs that came with the new version. And if things have not changed in other regards, I provide also some ideas of how Lightroom could be better than it is.

- Do I really need another file manager?
- Are your file manager features taken from a spreadsheet program?
- The file system is too slow. Why does Photoshop need to walk me through it?

Having a unified file management experience in Photoshop--even if you don't know exactly what it looks/works like--is a great idea. It's of course kinda like finding out that Windows has a USB port. And sure, some people have driven that analogy a bit too far. I know, totally twisted imagery, but it's surprisingly fun to see what people make of it. Already, there are more than 99,000 groups with over 10 million users. *People use it because they love it, but you can't teach that.
