Change the color, brightness, pulse width, on-off cycles and more. quartz-led. Led Player Software 49. The best thing in the world is that you can combine most programming and the best light effects in the world. Led player controlling software. The control of foreign-body elicited granulomatous inflammation by T-cell subsets is dependent on the locus of antigen encounter. Granulomatous inflammation is mediated by interleukin-1 (IL-1) and tumor necrosis factor-alpha (TNF-alpha) production by innate cells, and cytokine-primed T cells (Tc) and regulatory T cells (Treg) respectively. The role of T-cell subsets in orchestrating granuloma development after local encounter with non-viable Ag was studied in vivo. Responses were examined in wild-type (WT) and IL-1R1(-/-), IL-1alpha(-/-), TNFR1(-/-), TNFalpha(-/-), and TNFR1(-/-), IL-1alpha(-/-) mice challenged with non-viable Ag (polyclonal). Recruited monocyte/macrophage-derived IL-1 and TNFalpha were essential for neutrophil recruitment but T-cell-derived IL-1 was required for sustained neutrophil and macrophage recruitment. TNFalpha-primed Tc contributed to polyclonal Ag-induced neutrophil recruitment, but their Treg-like phenotype was critical for maintaining granuloma stability and resolving the inflammatory response. Treg numbers were elevated during the earliest stages of granuloma formation. In contrast, more persistent polyclonal Ag-induced granuloma formation was due to early T-cell anergy, with subsequent T-cell subsets contributing to granuloma development. In summary, macrophage-derived IL-1 and TNFalpha influence early recruitment of neutrophils, but T-cell-derived cytokines (IL-1) orchestrate a Treg-like phenotype that modulates the duration of granuloma m
