A North Korean has died in China while attempting to cross over into South Korea in violation of the country's border ban on the unification, officials in Seoul said Sunday. The top security officials said the 23-year-old North Korean man died in a Dongducheon police station after being moved to a hospital, where he was pronounced dead at 11:15 p.m. Saturday. He was found to be in a "very critical condition," when Chinese police first transferred him across the land border. The officials said he had a record of committing a number of crimes in China including human trafficking, document forgery and peddling prohibited items. "There's a possibility that he was trying to infiltrate South Korea to participate in anti-government activities and/or get aid," a senior official said. The officials said the man died because of severe brain trauma after a fall at the border crossing. They added that an autopsy and forensic tests were being conducted. The officials said they contacted Beijing authorities, which has jurisdiction over the transfer of the man, and that the death will be investigated in accordance with the Chinese laws. China strictly controls the border crossing and will not allow any person who crosses it to stay in China, they added.
