Gestures allow you to avoid the use of the mouse to make things very easy to use and get more done in a shorter amount of time. Gestures are, of course, a part of Photoshop and are very useful. If you're planning to do a lot of graphic and website design work, this ability has become a very necessary part of graphic design. In the Photoshop Touch application, you'll know the things that you can do with the mouse and this application could make it far easier for you to be productive and get work done faster than you ever could on a computer. Gestures are gestures of Photoshop and they allow you to do actions and save time. It is possible to create and use gestures to cut, copy, paste, drag and move layers or objects and create very quick and efficient ways to do things. There are many benefits that using a stylus or finger would have in comparison to a mouse and touch screen device. These gestures might also help you out of most common mistakes most graphic designers make. You can also learn more about Photoshop UI design using gestures here. Photoshop used to have support for hand-drawn graphics and photography, with the UI already capable of helping you create your own work. In Photoshop CC, however, this has been developed further to allow you to work with all sorts of manipulating aspects to allow you to create your own creative paintings. Touch support continues to evolve, and you can now use gestures to do a lot more and become entirely hands-free with your creativity.
